Vessel is unkempt, poorly maintained, "grungy", beat up. with lines and pieces of junk all over the place. There is a sense of laziness, lethargy, "good-for-nothingness" about the crew. It seems to be close to land--low, humid, "like" swampy keys or islands but near a mainland--like a coastal area that's somewhat at the mercy of developers/exploiters, and not protected in a more pristine form. Impression that it's not exactly open water like the Atlantic Ocean--more like a coastal area of the Gulf of Mexico than the Eastern Seaboard. There is some nasty stuff on board--elicits a "bad" AI. Ultimate landfall will be MS/AL/FL panhandle area--A/S of Mobile. Will not be delta/New Orleans area. Impression of tightly packed--almost baled like hay bales--of green, earthy-smelling leafy substance that is contained in a dark stuffy area in the central portion of the vessel. It is sealed off, like a large, metal hermetic locker with a heavy, metallic latch, large hinges, that you have to push hard to close, like there're gaskets around the edges. Further impression of little bottles with clear liquid in them. Some other substance (A/S cocaine) packed between two partitions/double walls. Space is wider at the top and tapers towards the bottom. Stuff is almost "built-in". Exterior surface seems to be new paint, lime green. Space runs along a passageway which is lengthwise with the vessel. Mao locational exercise places vessels approximately 22 deg 30 min N, 87 deg W in late afternoon.
